Comment: I am a current net metering customer of Idaho Power. When considering the expense of my solar power system I had only Idaho Power's current pricing to consider with no indications that this would change in the future. It would be extremely unfair to me and other consumers who installed their systems to change our rate structure in the future. Idaho Power's shareholders are the ones who should cover the expenses that are incurred. It is not the responsibility of the Public Utilities Commission to insure or enhance the earnings of private stock holders.

Thank you for considering my input.

Comment: We are looking at installing residential solar prior to the tentative deadline of the policy where new solar installs will be under a new billing structure and net metering will be no more. My understanding is that we would be able to continue under the net metering structure under a grandfather clause. My question is whether or not there are plans to set a time limit on how long the grandfather clause would last(some states have put a 20yr limit) or will the utility companies be able to propose changes that would result in the clause ending at anytime? My concern is that I want to have some security in knowing that my investment would be protected.
