Comment_description: With the outlook for the future indicating that the electricity needs of Idaho are only going to increase, it seems inappropriate that any public utility is seeking permission to sell off a power generating facility under any circumstance. Why is it that none of the other owners is wanting to sell or close the facility? The only way PacifiCorp ought to be allowed to remove this facility from its portfolio of power sources is under the condition that it commits to an equal generating capacity from another source. If it wants to get rid of this source, maybe the Commission could suggest that it comes back with a proposal to replace this power source with a wind power contract source.
