Comment_description: I understand that the P.U.C. is taking public comment regarding competition in the cell phone industry. These comments are offered as my perspective that competition between of cell phones and traditional "land lines" exists. As an attorney, all too often my cellular telephone is being used by my clients as the preferred choice of contact. More times than I care to recount, I will be available, in my office, and my cell phone will ring. I know of several people who have abandoned traditional land lines and have chosen to utilize cell phones as their primary telecommunications choice. My family in its small business uses cellular telephones almost to the exclusion of the company's land line. Cell phone companies are offering pricing packages that traditional land line companies cannot match - particularly with regard to long-distance calling.

There can be no question that the competition does exist and that, with the prevalence of cell-phones in modern life, the cell phone industry will continue to be more competitive.

Comment_description: Dear IPUC,

It's a new world. Wireless and IP voice and data services are on the rise. Please take the shackles off Qwest so they can compete fairly. I used to think it was Qwest's own fault that they were so inefficient and unresponsive to market forces. Further investigation leads me to believe it is interminable government regulation that creates most of their problems. SET THEM FREE!!!
